2020/21

Global Network of Civil Society Organisations
for Disaster Reduction

Introduction

In 2020/21, we as a global community face an unprecedented moment of crisis. Covid-19 is pushing humanity's resilience to the limit and has vast impacts on the wider social, cultural, economic, political and environmental fabric of our lives and livelihoods.

More than 200 million people have been affected, and sadly more than four million have died. The World Bank estimates the pandemic and the global recession may cause 1.4% of the global population to fall into extreme poverty.

In addition, there were 389 climate change induced disasters recorded in 2020, affecting around 98 million people, as reported by CRED/ UNDRR. The impact of individual disasters may seem small when compared with the unprecedented scale of the pandemic. Yet in comparison to the previous two decades, they report that the year saw a higher-than-average number of disasters, and economic losses over $150 billion.

Again, the consequences of these disasters, and the pandemic, have been felt hardest by people most at risk: women, the elderly, persons with disability, people living with underlying health conditions, immigrants and refugees, informal sector workers and young people. Time and again, their experience exposes the underlying fragility and inequalities of the society we live in.

More than ever, the pandemic has driven home the need for an all-society approach. We must focus on coherence within and among the host of global development frameworks that contribute to achieving the Sustainable Development Goals.

The work of civil society organisations on the front line has never been so important – and it has never been so difficult. The pandemic is not simply another threat amongst many existing drivers of risk. It challenges us to think of new ways to come together – at local, national and global levels – to ensure no one is left behind.

That's why our new global strategy, Local Leadership for Global Impact, is particularly timely. Pursuing our three goals – mobilising and strengthening civil society organisations, championing a localisation movement, and pursuing risk-informed development – is more relevant now than ever.

The year was hectic for all of us in the network. But despite lockdowns and working from home, we pushed ahead. The pandemic didn't dampen our spirits. Our network of members has now grown to more than 1,600 organisations in 128 countries.

Though we were constrained by not having face to face meetings and conferences, digital technology enabled us to connect with a wider range of members, partners and donors. We brought the voices of communities most at risk to global conversations, including to the High Level Political Forum. Strong relationships with our donors and project partners enabled us to adapt and continue to pursue the strategy of the network and our various projects.

As always, GNDR members are our strength and identity, and we continue to be indebted to them. Here we proudly share our annual report with everyone.

Our principles

Seven principles guide the approach of our members. In the chapters of this report you'll see where we are putting each of these principles into action.

Start at the local level

Recognise the local context and understand community perspectives of risk

Partner and collaborate

Work with and across all groups and levels to pursue the interests of people at risk

Include all groups

Ensure the inclusion of all groups, particularly those most at risk

Promote gender equality

Implement gender-transformative approaches

Mobilise different resources

Share resources, build on existing capacities, knowledge and other sources of resilience

Align policies with practices

Ensure coherence across disaster risk reduction, climate change and other development frameworks and activities

Be accountable to local communities most at risk

Ensure that we are accountable and challenge others to do the same

Our roles

A core strength of our network is the diversity of experience and expertise of members. In this report we highlight in each chapter examples of where we have played each of these roles.

Catalyst

We spark action and energy across and beyond this movement of civil society organisations to speed up an all-society approach for resilience; we facilitate and support local action by working in solidarity with people most at risk.

Capacity strengthener

We strengthen capacities and capabilities through member-to-member and member-to-partner support.

Convenor

We develop and strengthen relationships and partnerships by connecting local, national and international actors, working across different levels, agendas and frameworks.

Thought leader

We research, gather, generate and share knowledge, including indigenous expertise and innovations.

Amplifier

We mobilise, we harness local voices and we use our collective influence to lobby and campaign for the needs and priorities of people most at risk.

Reporter

We strive to ensure greater accountability and transparency through monitoring, reporting and evaluating local-level progress.

Regional advisory groups

transparent member representation

Our governance structure ensures that members are represented in an effective, responsive and transparent manner. Every four years members in each country appoint two members to be national focal points (one man, one woman).

In each region these national representatives then come together in what are called regional advisory groups (RAGs). The national focal points are responsible for leading GNDR activities at the national level and convening activities at the regional level. Each regional group is chaired by the Global Board representative from that region, thereby ensuring a bottom-up approach in the governance of our network.

Elections

In 2020, the Global Board called for RAGs to be formed in all 13 global regions to ensure members have a formal mechanism for collaboration and engagement. 131 RAG members from 103 countries have been elected to represent the members in their respective countries.

RAG meetings

This year 31 online RAG meetings were held. National focal points were oriented to our new five-year strategy. During subsequent meetings members developed regional plans to contextualise and implement the strategy in their regions. Members were also updated on the Secretariat plans and activities; and other operational issues, including an update from the RAG evaluation conducted earlier in the year.

Seven RAGs have now developed regional implementation plans: they have jointly identified activities they will undertake as a part of the network, at the regional and national levels to achieve our global strategic goals.

Regional advisory groups

East Africa and Central Asia

The East Africa and Central Asia regions have respectively decided to engage in peace-building lobbying, and advocacy to address the protracted risk of conflict in their regions. The West and Central Africa and South Asia members have planned to develop women leadership programmes.

Recognising the power of collaboration, 12 regions have facilitated capacity development and knowledge exchange among members, as well as encouraging and leveraging joint participation at regional and global events and pursuing joint advocacy efforts.

East and Southeast Asia

In East and Southeast Asia members have agreed to facilitate joint participation and advocacy at the Regional Conference on Humanitarian Affairs. Pacific regional members plan to conduct member-led experience sharing webinars on public health and psycho-social wellbeing, food and water security, and climate resilience.

Consortiums

Regional advisory groups provide a space to form consortiums to raise funds together. As a result, a group of members from South America have now formed a consortium and submitted two concept notes to local donors.

1

Principle

Civic space

Being part of the regional advisory groups has also helped widen civic space. For example, after being inducted into the Central Asia advisory group, the national focal point for Turkmenistan was able to organise a first-ever, two-day workshop for civil society organisations (CSOs) and government representatives in November 2020 on ‘The role of CSOs in enhancing emergency response and preventive measures to natural disasters’.

As an outcome of this webinar the participants were able to present a draft road map to the Civil Defense and Rescue Operations Directorate of the Ministry of Defence, with the aim that CSOs are included at national level disaster risk reduction (DRR) consultations. As a result, some of the participants were invited to the National Platform for DRR organised by the government.

National coordination meetings

National coordination meetings enable GNDR members to meet. Facilitated by elected representatives in each country – called national focal points – these meetings provide an opportunity to network, collaborate and share knowledge as they deliver the network strategy locally.

delivering the strategy locally

This year the meetings were held in November and December. Whilst the Covid-19 pandemic caused severe disruption in Latin America, 19 meetings were able to take place across Africa and Asia in a mixture of face-to-face and online formats. Over 450 members directly participated.

Collaborative planning

With the launch of the new GNDR strategy in May 2020, the national coordination meetings provided the chance for member organisations to come together and plan action that they can take together to achieve our three goals of collaboration, localisation and risk-informed development. Members were able to discuss and decide what disaster risk reduction activities should be prioritised at a national level, and joint advocacy to be undertaken.

Nigeria and Zimbabwe

In Nigeria and Zimbabwe, attendance at the meetings was also extended to partners, as a way to increase awareness of newly developed advocacy tools. Developed by members as part of our Evidence and Collaboration for Inclusive Development project, the tools provide guidance for civil society organisations on how to create campaign strategies and messages, particularly focused on marginalised groups. Members also shared research outcomes and developed advocacy partnerships to support the rights of women and people with disabilities at the national level.

GOAL 1

National coordination meetings

Republic of the Congo

In the Republic of the Congo, members have agreed to focus on the development and promotion of women leaders as a means to address gender inequality at the heart of disaster risk.

Kyrgyzstan

Representatives of the Ombudsman’s Office and the Ministry of Economy in Kyrgyzstan joined the national coordination meeting and discussed questions from civil society representatives on how to reduce communication and decision-making gaps between government agencies and society. Specifically, they talked about what needs to be changed so that citizens have more confidence in government departments.

Tanzania

Community-based disaster risk management was the focus of discussions in Tanzania. Members shared outputs and experiences from delivering our multi-year project focused on making community-led approach to risk sustainable and scalable. Training was provided to members with a focus on environmental conservation.

Egypt

Members in Egypt prioritised integrating disaster risk reduction concepts and initiatives into current development projects. They also devised ways to coordinate their strong and collective participation in national, regional and global events.

Environmental initiatives

There have been several environmental initiatives delivered collaboratively by members as a result of the national coordination meetings. In Kenya and Tanzania members have carried out tree planting and conservation awareness projects at the community level.

Digital networks

Many members have overcome the barriers to collaboration caused by the Covid-19 pandemic and government restrictions, by setting up small groups that can share and discuss the network strategy and disaster risk reduction priorities. Groups have made use of digital communication apps like WhatsApp groups to keep in regular communication – and as a means to exchange knowledge and information.

Digital global summit 2020

a gathering of local-level experts

Every two years, we hold a global summit that brings together members, partners and experts in disaster risk reduction. The event is designed to provide a mixture of capacity strengthening, networking and collaboration opportunities.

Open to all

Due to the Covid-19 pandemic, our 2020 summit was delivered as an online conference, rather than in person. This was actually a blessing in disguise: we were not limited to our usual capacity of 150 people, but could extend invites to all members.

Live sessions

Over three weeks in October, we held 30 live sessions on topics including: how CSOs and parliamentarians can partner; roundtables between donors and local organisations on challenges to localisation; tools to reduce risk in conflict settings; risk-informed development in primary education; and lessons on ecosystem-based approaches to building resilience. Sessions were delivered in English, French, Spanish and Arabic.

The dedicated summit website also hosted a wealth of resources and discussion boards related to our six risk drivers; plus an open space for members to discuss their regional risk reduction priorities.

Stakeholder representation

In total, 781 people, representing 608 different member organisations from 110 countries, attended the summit, including people representing communities most at risk, academics, local authorities, national governments, INGOs, donors, and representatives of the World Bank and United Nations.

Digital global summit
2020

Presentations and video recordings in four languages from 19 of the sessions are now available on our exclusive members' Community Platform website.

The launch sessions for the new GNDR strategy were attended by 218 people, subsequent to which 93% of participants said that our new five-year approach is useful for their work.

New skills and ideas

76% of participants highlighted that, through engaging in the summit, they learnt new skills, knowledge, ideas and approaches that they can take forward in their work. 60% of participants committed to collaborate with other members on activities after the event.

In our anonymous post-event survey one member reported: "I will use these skills which I learnt from this webinar in my training programme on capacity building under various disaster management programmes at district level." Another said: "I am going to explore the idea of starting mentorships between local disaster risk reduction experts and development agencies".

IMPACT STORY

Disability inclusion in the Philippines

GNDR Member organisation A2D Project has played a leading role in developing and facilitating the Cebu disability-inclusive disaster risk reduction network. Executive Director Katherine Velmonte talks about local risks and the inspiring community leader she works with.

IMPACT STORY

Over 100 sensors monitor weather, water and earth movements across the typhoon and earthquake-prone province of Cebu in the Philippines. The data can reportedly warn of potential life-threatening hazards up to nine hours before they occur. But even with sophisticated set-ups like this, people with disabilities continue to face significant challenges when disasters hit.

Insufficient planning

Corazon Bajuyo Clarin knows all about these difficulties. After contracting polio in her childhood, the 62-year-old still has reduced mobility and makes use of a wheelchair. ‘It’s hard for me to even run to ask for help,’ she says. ‘Or to move around and reach out for things if I’m not prepared.

‘Eighty percent of people with disabilities would be unable to evacuate immediately without difficulty in the event of a sudden disaster,’ Ms Clarin says. Persons with disabilities are more likely to be left behind or abandoned during disaster evacuations because there is insufficient preparation and planning, as well as inaccessible facilities and services.

Disaster-inclusive DRR

Her involvement in disaster risk reduction began after Typhoon Haiyan in 2015. A2D Project organised a series of consultations with stakeholders to document the experiences of persons with disabilities during and after the typhoon. Ms. Clarin’s organisation, Women with Disabilities LEAP to Social and Economic Progress, was actively involved. What started as conversations among organisations of persons with disabilities, community leaders and other disaster front liners became the Cebu Disability-inclusive Disaster Risk Reduction

Network, of which Ms Clarin is the current convenor.

Disability rights

At present, A2D Project, Ms. Clarin and the members and partners of the network collaborate to advance disability rights in the province. Collaborative initiatives include roadshows, training, radio talk shows, and seminars and conferences that are geared towards mainstreaming inclusion and diversity – not just in disaster risk reduction and emergency preparedness, but in development in general.

mainstreaming inclusion and diversity

IMPACT STORY

Simple solutions

Implementing DRR has many simple solutions: early warning alarms should not only use sound – a flashing light can warn a deaf person of impending hazards. Evacuation routes need to be accessible to people with reduced mobility. Disaster preparedness training should be delivered in sign language, and public resources made available in audio or large text format to ensure accessibility. Government service providers should be given intensive training on employing different inclusive principles and strategies to ensure that no one is excluded and left behind.

Awareness raising

Awareness is often the starting point of inclusivity. The team of trainers led by Ms Clarin is made up of people with disabilities: Marvelous Jorda, a trainer with a visual impairment, often prompts participants to consider how a blind person might evacuate, for example during a fire. Mariah Agbay, a deaf trainer, teaches the essentials of sign language. ‘Police and government representatives should know how to communicate with us,’ she says. ‘This kind of training must be attended by local government units, volunteers, and rescuers,’ Agbay adds. Deaf people like herself need to be the ones conducting the workshops in order to expose the hearing community to the wider community.

A contributor to development

The training team travels around the province to raise awareness of disability inclusion in disaster risk reduction – and to reduce stigma. Whenever there is opportunity, they conduct accessibility audits in buildings and provide recommendations on how to make their venues more accessible.

‘We’ve come to the realisation that we’re part of society,’ Ms Clarin says. ‘We are not a burden to society, but a contributor to development.’

Community resilience plans

a step towards localisation

694 at-risk communities across 49 countries have assessed threats to their lives and livelihoods, barriers to their inclusion in development plans and activities, and their access to essential resources for resilience building.

To address the gaps they identified, each local community has developed and carried out a local action plan with the support of funding mobilised by the network.

Community-led

Communities developed their action plans based on the conclusions drawn from the surveys from our wider Views from the Frontline project. The local action plans were then developed by communities together with local stakeholders, such as government authorities and civil society organisations.

Action plans

Local action plans address underlying risk factors such as poverty, lack of access to water, poor engagement of communities in risk reduction processes by local governments, and conflict, amongst others.

Each plan identifies key activities that should be undertaken, by whom, and the resources needed. The funding gives each community an opportunity to implement one priority activity from their action plan, with the aim of triggering further initiatives.

Localisation

The process for creating local action plans is a step towards localisation: communities take their own decisions on the actions that help them to reduce the risks they face. These plans have developed synergies between local communities and other stakeholders, and provided the impetus for sustained engagement and collaboration at the local level for collective decision making.

GOAL 2

Community
resilience plans

Bangladesh

In Bangladesh, communities have created a civic engagement alliance – an advocacy platform that will give space to communities to engage effectively with the local government. Community-based organisations will also be part of this alliance.

Mali

Communities in Mali have taken action collectively with community-based organisations to train residents in conflict management and resolution. The results show that Views from the Frontline action planning activities have contributed towards building a more cohesive approach to reducing the impacts of disaster risks at the local level.

Tajikistan

In Tajikistan two urban municipalities have realised the importance of access to information on disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation, and have integrated this as one of their action points. Many local civil society organisations engaged in the Views from the Frontline programme are now replicating this approach in the other communities facing similar risks.

Government collaboration

One of the most significant impacts of our programme has been the ability of communities to identify their own issues and solutions and implement them in collaboration with the local government and civil society. Action plans have also initiated activities that strengthened the engagement of local actors with communities. Communities have piloted new ideas, serving as an example for other communities or local governments to replicate.

Community-based disaster risk management

sustainable and institutionalised

Community-based disaster risk management (CBDRM) is an approach that enables communities to monitor and assess their own risks, plans and implementation actions for reducing disasters.

However, these initiatives can often fail because communities are excluded from wider decision-making processes led by local authorities and other stakeholders. Our project, led by GNDR members, aims to make CBDRM approaches sustainable and institutionalised, by identifying policies, structures and mechanisms that can provide an enabling environment for local disaster risk reduction.

Collective experience

In the first two years of the project a toolkit was produced which synthesised the collective experiences of over 200 civil society organisations working in CBDRM – and the key success factors for scaling out these approaches.

Shared learning

This year project partners across Asia, Africa and Latin America shared their learning directly with local government authorities and organisations working at national and regional levels – with the aim of building political commitment and accountability to communities most at risk.

Advocacy campaigns

To support these activities, advocacy training was provided to the project partners by the GNDR Secretariat. Six partners then held local workshops with other civil society organisations and key stakeholders to develop joint national advocacy plans. The resulting awareness-raising campaigns in each country demanded change from their governments.

The successful campaigns led to national collaboration meetings, attended by government authorities responsible for disaster management, national civil society organisations and the media. Attendees discussed the gaps identified and the commitment required from all stakeholders. The advocacy initiatives engaged over 300,000 people globally.

India

Partners of SEEDS, an NGO in India, worked with the National Disaster Management Authority and Policy Commission to address policy gaps such as: a lack of access to resources by communities, and the lack of participation of communities in development plans, processes and monitoring.

a positive step towards the localisation of disaster risk reduction and a shift in power towards communities most at risk

Philippines

In the Philippines, our project partner, Centre for Disaster Preparedness, developed a local version of the toolkit for institutionalising CBDRM. An online digital campaign and a series of webinars highlighted the value of community-based approaches. The toolkit is now established as a guide for all national and local civil society organisations working to integrate community-led processes into risk management in the country.

Fundraising training and coaching

In our 2019 members survey, 68% of respondents said they needed support to strengthen their fundraising capacity. Members said they wanted to understand which donors might be most likely to support their work and develop skills in writing proposals for funding grants.

68%

of members said they needed support to strengthen their fundraising capacities

To meet these needs, we held a series of proposal writing workshops, as part of the GNDR global summit in October. Each session was tailored to the needs of civil society organisations in a specific global region.

The content focused on the structure of proposal documents and the key requirements of donors, for example: a problem statement and theory of change; an accurate budget; and a demonstration of how a prospective project matches a donor's objectives.

Meeting member needs

We held a session called 'Top 3 proposal writing challenges' that answered the key difficulties members' said they face in composing grant submissions. This included topics such as: how to approach a donor; how to construct a strong narrative; and how to put together a logical framework. 79 participants attended the session, with participants from 45 countries including Benin, Thailand, Rwanda, Argentina, Egypt, DRC, Yemen to name a few.

Feedback from members suggested that they found these sessions immensely helpful for gaining a better understanding of the key elements of what goes into a successful proposal, and also in understanding the grant-making process from a donor perspective.

Stronger collaboration

Follow-up sessions were held for each region on how to partner with other organisations to form a consortium that can collectively approach funders.

Fundraising training and coaching

The aim of these sessions was to support members in forming stronger collaborations. The session looked at tools to use to explore areas such as strengths and synergies between potential partners, alongside considering weaknesses and differences in structure and decision-making. Following the training the GNDR regional advisory group in southern Africa submitted a proposal to the UN Democracy Fund, which they had developed together at our summit.

Regional fundraising

As part of our regional advisory group meetings at the beginning of 2021, presentations were given by our fundraising coordinator on how to do regional fundraising. To support members further, fundraising tips and donor calls are shared on a weekly basis on the exclusive member website, the Community Platform, with the aim of increasing capacity and providing opportunities to put training into practice.

Joint proposals

These combined fundraising capacity strengthening initiatives have led to discussions amongst member organisations in each region on forming proactive consortia with the view to applying together for a joint proposal. This has been strong in the East Africa region where members are collaboratively looking for a donor call to apply for together. In addition, networking and the sharing of learning and best practice in relation to fundraising has continued through regional advisory groups and national coordination meetings.

IMPACT STORY

Women leaders tackle disaster risk in Brazil

GNDR member Rodrigo Dalmeida has spent more than a decade bringing together community members, civil society organisations and the local government to tackle disaster risk. He describes his work with one community in Rio de Janeiro that has taken action to reduce the impact of floods.

IMPACT STORY

Christina Rosario de Oliveira is one of a dozen volunteers that monitor rainfall and river levels in Itaipava, a mountainous region of Rio de Janeiro state. Affectionately called ‘the stone that cries’, the valley has experienced widespread flooding, resulting in the loss of many lives and homes.

Community leadership

The volunteers led by Christina now take responsibility for monitoring rainfall and river levels along a 12km stretch of the Piabanha River. Data is shared digitally and the group communicates using WhatsApp.

Her journey to becoming a leader in her community started back in 2008. Heavy rain resulted in major flooding across the Cuiabá Valley. ‘It was as if my house had been in the middle of the sea,’ she says. ‘And when I looked around in the distance I could see little boats, only those were other houses.’

Her ground floor home and many of her possessions were ruined by the floodwater. She was pregnant at the time and the experience caused her to lose her baby.

volunteers now monitor rainfall and river levels

Before the next floods hit in 2011, she had managed to rebuild her family home on the second floor. For the month and a half that followed the storm Christina managed to shelter a dozen families in her 90 square metre house. 40 people who had been made homeless by the disaster stayed with her.

A new approach to risk

I met Christina a few months after. I was training volunteers in school safety activities for Save the Children and she was working for one of the schools engaged in the project. Later I designed a project based on school safety and community civil defence groups and it brought us together again.

The experience of flooding in Rio de Janeiro state demanded a new approach to risk management.

IMPACT STORY

The introduction of a federal law in 2012 established the National Civil Defence System: a mechanism for linking national government agencies with communities in at-risk areas. Local civil defence centres, known as NUDECs, were formed by groups of residents who received training in disaster prevention and emergency response.

Civil defence partnerships

Christina has dedicated part of her home to be the full-time office and working space where her group of volunteers meet. They work in direct partnership with the municipal civil defence department, allowing local data to be shared and joint response action agreed during heavy rainfall.

Women lead the action

All of the volunteers are women living in the neighbourhood and include healthcare workers, teachers and housewives. Throughout 2020-21 the group has mapped the dangers the community faces, such as floods and landslides. They have outlined evacuation plans and provided training in risk management, for example in schools. The volunteers have enabled residents to identify risks where they live themselves – and use that knowledge to prevent future disasters.

Stakeholder engagement

I have been privileged to work with Christina and her group numerous times over the years on collaborative disaster risk reduction work – bringing together the volunteers in her NUDEC with civil society organisations and local authorities.

‘After all that happened to me,’ Christina says, ‘I decided to stay in my community. I got to love my community. And so, I came to realise: “What can I do to improve the place I love so much?” Some people will say the role of women is to wash, iron, tidy and cook. But no. There are many other important roles within society, within the community, that need to be valued.’

Making displacement safer

Over 80 million people worldwide were forcibly displaced by the end of 2020. On average, people are displaced for a duration of 20 years. A new GNDR project aims to protect lives, livelihoods and assets for displaced people in urban areas.

Funded by USAID, the activities of the project include research to gather information on the direct experiences of displacement, as well as successful local solutions and advocacy campaigns.

So far members implementing the initiative have interviewed 4,600 displaced people in 11 countries. 70% of interviewees are still affected by disasters, and in some cases years have passed since the initial event that caused them to leave their home.

There is a clear lack of basic services such as food, water, education and health. Displaced people remain incredibly vulnerable, often living on the outskirts of cities in informal settlements without secure work, homes or health and social services.

Iraq

Displaced people in Iraq are no exception. Current data shows over one million people are displaced and nearly 6.5 million are 'people of concern'. Years of sectarian violence and conflict have forced thousands to seek shelter in the city of Mosul. Upon arrival, they've found themselves at risk of new hazards.

One of our member organisations in Iraq who, for security concerns asked to remain anonymous, is delivering our project on-the-ground. In Mosul they have identified where critically vulnerable groups are living and conducted surveys and focus groups to understand their situation. They've also sought the perspectives of host communities and local government representatives.

4,600 displaced people in 11 countries were interviewed

GOAL 3

Making displacement safer

Innovative solutions

The collated research will be used to inform and create innovative solutions to build resilience amongst displaced people. Decisions on what solution to trial will be made involving the most at-risk people themselves.

Our member reports: ‘We have a long history of dealing with internally displaced people to address their needs. But we are using this project to know more on how to employ a disaster risk reduction strategy to build up their long-term resilience. This means focusing on efforts to strengthen their capacity, to restore and sustain their lives and livelihoods, and be better equipped for future conflict and disasters so they don’t have the same damaging effect again.’

Direct representation

As part of planned advocacy efforts GNDR members will ask local and national governments to ensure displaced populations are represented in the decisions that affect their lives. This could be through consultation on policies, plans and reviews of work; giving access to financial resources to help reduce risks; or giving people access to timely and usable information.

‘In the first months of our project,’ the member in Iraq says, ‘our relationship with internally displaced people has improved – especially because we have promised them that we will try our best to ensure their voice reaches local government representatives. This is a critical starting point for building resilience as, without it, we cannot respond. We hope that the government listens to their voices and alleviates their suffering.’

Advocating for community priorities

GNDR members and the communities they work with experience the impact of disasters firsthand. To ensure development is risk-informed a thorough understanding of local realities is needed, as well as the participation of all society groups.

a thorough understanding of local realities

To address this challenge, GNDR is working closely with the UNDRR Stakeholder Engagement Mechanism (SEM), a group that brings together representatives from civil society groups and the private sector, to jointly advocate for risk-informed development and an all-of-society approach to resilience. GNDR has been leading the SEM since its formal launch in 2019.

All-of-society approach

Our work is anchored on the principle of partnerships and all-of-society approaches to achieving our strategy: our involvement in the SEM has contributed to making it an example of multi-stakeholder collaboration at the international level.

This year we raised awareness on the importance of resilience approaches to tackle Covid-19. For example, engaging local actors to get a full understanding of the consequences of the pandemic on communities, and looking at response measures that build back better and increase prevention in the future.

Protect the most vulnerable

We organised various webinars, including at the High Level Political Forum for Sustainable Development, the London Climate Week and a preparatory event for the 2021 Food Systems Summit. The foundation of our engagements was a joint statement issued at the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic that highlighted the key messages of the SEM. One such message was a call for stronger commitment to protect the most vulnerable from this and future disasters.

GOAL 3

Advocating for community priorities

Covid-19

During the summer of 2020, SEM members shared their experiences of responding to Covid-19 while dealing with other risks. These stories were compiled in a report that highlights how pre-existing DRR activities contribute to a better and more effective response to the pandemic. The executive summary is available on UNDRR’s website.

These activities made the group’s messages more visible to policy-makers at the international level. The webinars also resulted in increased collaboration among SEM members to strengthen our engagement in key international processes.

Strengthen partnerships

Through their engagement in the SEM, organisations traditionally under-represented (such as indigenous people, people with disabilities, local CSOs) were able to strengthen their partnership with UNDRR. As a result, the SEM was invited to provide input to their new strategic framework guiding its activities between 2022 and 2025, and to support stakeholders’ engagement in global DRR platforms.

Systematic inclusion

Increased collaboration with UNDRR has resulted in a more systematic inclusion of CSOs and other non-governmental actors in the work of this UN agency. This is a first but important step in ensuring an all-of-society approach to resilience policy-making. By engaging in these processes, we contribute experiences and lessons learnt from people at the front line of disasters. This also shows the wealth of knowledge communities have in resilience building.

Moreover, by engaging in discussions on sustainable development, climate change and food security, SEM highlighted the importance of integrating resilience in sectors where risk is not always taken into account.

Community climate action

mitigate and adapt to the impact of a changing climate

Many of the communities our members work with face the impact of climate-induced disasters. Our three-year Views from the Frontline programme has captured the experiences of people in nearly 700 communities. These people have now devised local action plans to tackle the risks they face.

Communities around the world have identified the key activities that will enable them to mitigate and adapt to the impact of a changing climate. For example: building the skills of smallholder farmers on climate-smart agriculture; raising awareness through reforestation campaigns; addressing issues of solid waste management; and advocacy work with local and national governments on implementing policies related to climate change adaptation.

Zimbabwe

In Zimbabwe, farmers were trained on land management approaches that integrate cropland, livestock and forest to address the interlinked challenges of food security and climate change. Civil society organisations were also supported to engage with stakeholders to ensure policy coherence at the local level.

Vanuatu

In Vanuatu, communities have set up a committee to address the impacts of climate change. The committee will form part of the National Disaster Management Office in each district. Activities will include developing a cropping calendar and new data collection.

GOAL 3

Community
climate action

Cameroon

The key outputs from all of the Views from the Frontline action plans on climate change focused on the three A's: action, awareness and advocacy. Examples of action include: planting trees; developing solid waste management systems; undertaking training; and developing cropping calendars. Young people in Cameroon were equipped to recycle and manage plastic waste, which not only developed their understanding of material and environmental management, but facilitated self-employment and entrepreneurship.

awareness and

Niger

Communities in Niger led awareness-raising campaigns on protecting their ecosystems, while also creating new income opportunities by diversifying livelihoods impacted by climate variability.

Although each community activity connected to climate change, the outcome was not the same because they focused on different climate impacts – such as food and water insecurity, ecosystem degradation, the loss of livelihoods, and forced youth migration.

Zimbabwe

Our national-level programme partners in Zimbabwe used the evidence gathered at the community level to engage with the national authorities to ensure policy coherence of disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation at the local level. Programme partners also tested alternative livelihood options arising out of the recycling and reuse of plastic waste. And actions to reduce soil degradation and protect ecosystems and forest lands, simultaneously support environmental conservation and help reduce the impact of climate change.

Local risk governance

In addition, our programme provided opportunities for communities to engage with local risk governance systems, policy work and the implementation of development plans. For example, establishing each community committee was a step towards institutionalising the process of engagement with local risk governance management systems. And campaigns on reforestation and solid waste management helped to sensitise communities to environmental protection.

Views from the Frontline global report

We have collated local voices and shared them with governments making development decisions and the international agencies that influence their policies and projects.

If development decisions fail to take into account how floods can exacerbate poverty, or how epidemics destroy incomes, then lives and development gains can be lost. But all too often these decisions are made without the use of local evidence or listening to people directly experiencing disasters.

decisions are often

Locally gathered data

We examined all the local data from our programme and analysed the findings of our members who conducted the surveys at the community level in 50 countries. Our online global report provides nine conclusions as to why people are still losing their lives and livelihoods to disasters.

Key findings

As highlighted in our report, only 16% of people at risk feel included in the decisions about how to reduce their own risk. Poor planning of participation, in terms of timing and convenience, prevents many citizens from participating in local resilience plans and actions.

Responsibilities are also not being appointed: half of local government respondents said that no office is specifically responsible for assessing and addressing community risks. And eight out of ten community members say they can't access funds to build their own resilience.

Since the release of this report, governments at national and sub-national level in 25 countries have acknowledged the value of citizen-based data as an input to their plans and policies.

Nature-based solutions

Our report has also been presented to the UN Environment Programme, who have used the conclusion that 60% of community members say that ecosystem-based approaches aren't used in building resilience in their community, to support their strategy for increasing nature-based solutions.

Global impact

Two donor institutions that are GNDR partners – the Swiss Development Cooperation and the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency – have used our data in their triangulation of information to arrive at funding decisions.

The UN Stakeholder Engagement Mechanism has drawn on the conclusion that two-thirds of community members say that local investment projects don't consider local risks, to design a joint evidence-based advocacy campaign on the need for risk-informed development.

New approaches

The report has also been used by multiple universities to define further research projects, including those on multi-hazard decision making in cities, and gender-transformative approaches to eco-DRR.

Finally, we have used the report to define our new GNDR strategy. Each strategic goal has emerged from one of the conclusions of the report and has a baseline from the data. We have committed to address three of the conclusions over the next five years.

IMPACT STORY

Reducing farmers' vulnerability to floods in Malawi

GNDR members Tambuzgani Msiska and Allan Mhlanzi from Plan International Malawi have worked directly with farmers to reduce risks associated with flooding. Here they describe the experiences of one farmer they have collaborated with.

IMPACT STORY

‘If someone is to stay with hunger it’s their choice now,’ John Mphaya says. It’s a bold statement from someone who only a few years ago lost his home, possessions and only source of income during widespread floods. And the threat of those seasonal floodwaters hasn’t gone away.

John and his wife Esinala are maize farmers who live with their seven children in Magombo village at the foothills of Mount Mulanje in southern Malawi. In 2015 their village was hit by heavy rains and flooding after the bank of a nearby river burst. ‘Water filled the entire village,’ he says.

Loss of income

The floodwaters washed away their field of maize – their income – and destroyed their home. He and his family, along with neighbouring farmers, had to wait on the mountainside until the floodwater receded.

‘We came back here to rebuild our life,’ he says, referring to their return home. ‘That year I harvested a lot less than usual. I even failed to provide the necessary support for my children’s education. I opted to get into debt.’

Reducing vulnerability

The threat of floods remains but the community of farmers in Mulanje, including John and Esinala, have managed to reduce the risk they face and prevent another disaster. Not by preventing floods – but by reducing their vulnerability.

They have recently been part of an agriculture irrigation project supported by Plan International Malawi. The community has built a weir on the river. This intervention controls the water flow, and channels and pipes irrigate each farmer’s small patch of land with coverage of 13 hectares.

Community participation

‘I was involved in the construction of the scheme – mixing cement and bringing construction stones,’ John says. ‘Both men and women took part in the construction work because this is something that we had wanted for a long time.’

The water improves the quality of the soil and enables John and Esinala to plant and harvest three times a year, instead of just once. They now reap up to 2,500 kg of maize annually – nearly double their previous yield. The maize has a market value of US$1,600, depending on prices and seasonal demand.

both men and women took part

IMPACT STORY

‘Things have changed for the better,’ Esinala says. ‘We no longer lack food. We are also able to take a portion of the harvest and sell it to cover other household spending.’

Sustainable livelihoods

The additional income has allowed them to pay off the credit they took after the floods and replace their mud dwelling with a home made of bricks and mortar. The family is able to pay secondary school fees for their children. They have also acquired a small building where they can safely store grains for future consumption or sale. John bought a plot of land where he has now constructed a house for renting out. He also purchased two cattle and five goats which will be a source of income once sold. ‘I learnt that having multiple sources of income is one of the ways of reducing vulnerability, hence my reason to diversify.’ John says.

Man-made solutions

Preventing floods is the next step. ‘As people we can implement man-made solutions to help change the situation,’ John says, ‘because if floods are happening it is due to deforestation, soil erosion and land degradation.’ The community plans to undertake agroforestry next and build the capacity of farmers to protect their land.

Until then, floods may return, but John and his family are now more resilient – their home will not be washed away, and they have savings and stored grains to sustain themselves. ‘Problems will always be there, but life is better now,’ he says. ‘Life has transformed.’
